Instructor

Dr. Sadananda Das is widely known as an excellent speaker and experienced teacher of spoken Sanskrit. He has taught seventeen summer school courses in spoken Sanskrit at Heidelberg University, three at Lausanne University, and three at the Australian National University, beside five courses in advanced spoken Sanskrit at Florence University, at the Centre of Sanskrit Studies in Barcelona, at the Jñāna Pravāha Centre for Cultural Studies in Varanasi and at the Śādvāla Centre for Sanskrit Studies in Goa. This year's course will take place at Leipzig University for the fifth time. In the past years, the course has attracted students and scholars of Indology and related fields from across the globe.

Contents and methods

In this course, students will learn how to converse in Sanskrit on topics of daily life by using both classical and modern vocabulary. Active participation of the students and modern multi-media tools will facilitate the learning process in the interactively designed course. Thus, the students and scholars will be able to overcome the perception of Sanskrit as a written-only, "dead" language, and increase their confidence in actively using this language. The study of Sanskrit will become a lively and creative experience for the students and will also contribute to their understanding of the written language. The course is a unique opportunity to learn and practice spoken Sanskrit in a dynamic environment.

The Summer School is planned as a face-to-face event and will take place at the Institute for South and Central Asian Studies at Leipzig University.

Prerequisites

Knowledge of English and basic knowledge of Sanskrit (at least two semesters) as well as the ability to read Devanāgarī script. The course will be taught in Sanskrit.
